

Wovenward

A considered clothing experience.

Helping shoppers browse by availability, understand fit, and review exactly what they add to their bag.

Less uncertainty, from browse to bag.

A responsive clothing concept built around product clarity and deliberate choices.

THE CHALLENGE

Clothes are easy to see.

Fit is harder to judge.

A product photo cannot answer every shopping question. Availability, measurements and the selected variant need to be clear before a shopper adds an item.

DESIGN GOAL

Make each decision legible.

Bring in-stock sizes into discovery, explain sizing on the product page, and carry the exact choice into a reviewable bag.

FOCUS

Responsive shopping

Homepage, collection, product details, size guidance and bag.

CONTRIBUTION

UX & visual design

Experience structure, interface direction, interaction states and responsive refinement.

BOUNDARY

A concept store

Twelve sample products. No payment, fulfilment or completed purchase flow.

One decision prepares the next.

The core journey connects discovery, fit and selection without hiding the details.

01

Discover

Enter through featured pieces or a category.

02

Narrow

Filter by category, available size and price.

03

Evaluate

Inspect the garment and compare measurements.

04

Review

Check the chosen variant and quantity in the bag.

CONTINUITY

Keep browsing context.

Search, filters and sorting live in the URL. Returning to the collection can preserve the shopper's choices.

RECOVERY

Make correction straightforward.

Filters can be removed, a missing size can be corrected beside the control, and bag quantities can be changed within stock limits.

Warm editorial design. Practical controls.

A restrained palette and clear type hierarchy let clothing lead the page.

DISPLAY

Newsreader

The serif headings give the brand an editorial voice. Large, spacious headlines establish hierarchy without competing with product images.

INTERFACE

Manrope

A sans serif carries navigation, prices, available sizes and actions. Indigo identifies primary controls; darker clay supports accent text.

Selected and sold-out sizes also use words, checks and distinct borders—colour is never the only signal.

Give the collection a clear entrance.

The hero leads into featured clothing, categories and concise store information.

01

An editorial opening

The offset image composition and serif headline establish the brand. “Shop the collection” provides a direct next step.

02

A quieter supporting image

The oat jumper replaced a stronger red inset. The caption and inset were separated so the composition stays readable.

03

More useful repetition

Hero items do not repeat in the featured row, giving the first part of the page a broader view of the collection.

Browse what is actually available.

A size filter should describe stock, not simply the sizes a garment was made in.

DISCOVERY

Narrow the range

Category, size and maximum price work alongside title search and sorting. A count and removable chips keep the active choices visible.

PRODUCT CARDS

Answer the basics

Name, price, colour and available sizes appear in a consistent order. Only in-stock sizes are listed on the cards.

Put fit beside the decision.

Product details pair garment photography with size, quantity and supporting information.

SIZE SELECTION

Show every state

Available, selected and sold-out options look different and include non-colour cues. Adding without a size brings guidance to the options.

PRODUCT CONTEXT

Support evaluation

Fit, composition, care and illustrative shipping information sit with the product. A labelled gallery supports closer inspection.

Product interaction view from the Wovenward build.

Help at the moment it is needed.

Sizing guidance and confirmation are part of the shopping flow, not separate destinations.

REFINED WOVENWARD COLLECTION

HIERARCHY

Make details easier to scan.

Card names and prices use 16 px type; colour and available sizes use darker 14 px text. Long names wrap clear of the price.

Clear decisions on smaller screens.

The collection stays scannable, while product actions remain close to the selection.

Homepage

Collection

Size selection

MOBILE

A continuous flow

A compact navigation, responsive grids and a fixed product action support smaller screens. Dialogs preserve a clear path back to the page.

MOTION

Support the hierarchy

Short entrances, card feedback and gentle reveals add emphasis. Reduced-motion settings turn these effects off.

A coherent browse-to-bag experience.

The result is a working responsive concept with clearer product and selection states.

DELIVERED

Discovery, fit and review

The homepage, collection, product guidance and bag form a connected journey. The strongest improvements are the visible stock information and precise variant feedback.

RECORDED CHECKS

Behaviour verified in the build

The development record reports 76 scripted checks passing twice, clean type checking and a production build, plus no axe violations in 24 scanned states.

LESSON

Consistency is product information.

A photograph, name, colour and size need to agree across the card, product page and bag. A more polished image only helps when those details remain accurate.

NEXT VALIDATION

Test confidence, not just completion.

Observe shoppers finding an in-stock size, interpreting the guide and checking a bag. These tasks could reveal whether the information supports confident choices.

No usability study was conducted. Automated checks do not establish ease of use or accessibility for everyone. Screen readers, other browsers and real devices remain to be tested.
